

How does your family interact with technology (and each other)?

This is a PhD project undertaken at RMIT University in partnership with Smart Services Cooperative Research Centre. The study seeks to investigate Australian families' use of the Internet, television and mobile phones.

The focus is on how technologies shape the ways in which family members communicate and spend time with each other.

If you have children between 12 – 17 years, and are interested in participating in research exploring families and their use of technologies, please contact Yvonne Gora:
